Announces its Interdisciplinary
Seminar for 1990-91:
The Trajectory of Modernity

Max Weber (1864-1920) occupies a central place among the founders of twentieth century social science. His thought contributed significantly to the development of sociology, political theory, economics, history, and philosophy as well as to disciplines concerned with the study of religion, law, and art.

Weber's thought as a whole represents a seminal source of our understanding of the nature of modernity: its rise and possible fate. The Weber Seminar, under the direction of Dr. John Drysdale, will concentrate on selected writings of Weber, including the well-known study, The Protestant Ethic and the Spirit of Capitalism, chosen in relation to the theme: The Trajectory of Modernity. The seminars, LUCC 399 B/3 01 (6 credits) and LUCC 398 B/2 (3 credits) are open to all students.

For further information, call Loneragan University College at 848-2280, or, better, drop in and see the College at 7302 Sherbrooke St. West at the corner of West Broadway. You can be sure of a warm welcome.
